ABOUT RYAN

About Running – people start running for many reasons – fitness, weight loss, qualifying for Boston, in my case, to completely change my life. Join me as we journey together in finding why running change my life. Ryan is an athlete, blogger, and coach who has inspired people around the world with his open and honest discussion of panic, anxiety, and Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD). Having suffered with OCD throughout his life, he first got into running after trying everything else. From diets to conventional medicines, nothing seemed to be any help. He had hit rock bottom when he decided to give running a try. On the verge of suicide, he found himself on a new adventure. Setting goals for himself and escaping from the struggle that had become his everyday life, he dove headlong into the sport and never looked back.

After seven years, Ryan has run more than forty half marathons, three full marathons, and many 5Ks and 10Ks. He finds deep joy in running, and along the way, he has made some lifelong friends. Every time he puts on his running shoes, he knows that he is having fun but also that he is fighting a battle. Passionate about both aspects of his sport, he seeks to encourage others to find their own energy in life just as he has.

Anxiety is a battle that Ryan is willing to fight! #beatnanxiety #endthestigma

WHAT THEY SAY

“You’ve inspired me. I am in very poor health and fitness is hard for me most of the time. I’ve decided to purchase a treadmill next week and start at my own pace. I am having faith that this will help me with my mental health.” – Mickey Kelly

“When I reached out to Ryan about my personal struggle with learning to run, not only did he answer my questions, but he took time to question and dig deeper. He analyzed my physical condition, my mental state of mind, and my dedication to learning. Once he had a complete understanding of me, he developed a plan that made me a runner. I went from running one mile for the first time in my life to running a half marathon in about 6 months. I had already started a journey to get healthy and fit when I met Ryan. I already lost about 50 pounds. However, I was at the point that I needed more to push me to the next level. When I found Ryan and told my story, he did not hesitate to help me. He has been by my side ever since! I know who I can turn to about running shoes or stress relief! There is no wrong question with Ryan. He does not give anyone an opportunity to be less than their best. He works hard to bring out the best in others.” - Kristina Richardson
